Melinda Jensen: BEFORE

"You're overweight," the doctor told Oregon resident Melinda Jensen. It was the last week of December one year ago. The mother of three little kids had been putting off a routine checkup for months. Why? She dreaded hearing those words from the doctor.

"Your blood pressure is high, and so is your blood sugar," the doctor continued. "We can put you on a number of medications, or you can try to work off the weight with diet and exercise to lower these numbers."

Until now, Jensen had a long list of excuses for packing on the pounds. Extra weight she gained during three pregnancies, a busy schedule, and snacking to manage stress. But when the doctor gave her the news about her weight and her health, she was ready to change.

"I set a goal to lose 60 pounds in a year," says Jensen. "And I wanted to do it by eating healthier and getting more exercise."

You've set a goal or made a New Year's resolution to better your health. Good for you! Do you know what you need to do to be successful? Get enough sleep. Have healthy eating habits. Be active. Make sure your goals are realistic (Losing 1 to 2 pounds is a healthy weight-loss goal). Get support from others and from professionals. They can help you stick with it, or get back on track.

Answers: 1. True. 2. True. 3. True. 4. True. 5. True.

Did you wake up on New Year's Day determined to lose weight, be more active, eat healthier, quit smoking, or get out of debt? You're not alone. About half of all adults make New Year's resolutions. But few turn those good intentions into life-changing success.

Studies show that 36 percent of people who set goals throw in the towel and go back to old habits in the first month. Sound familiar? It doesn't have to be that way. Take the month-long challenge to Rescue Your Resolutions.

SMART Goals Improve Results

When Jensen committed to losing 60 pounds in a year, she didn't spend a lot of time worrying about that big number afterwards. Instead, she followed a proven plan using SMART goals to tip the scale in the right direction.

If you've been struggling with your New Year's resolutions to get healthy, now is a good time to take a closer look at your plan. Your SMART goals should be:

Specific	Measurable	Action-Oriented	Reasonable	Time-Bound
Define your goal with as much detail as you can. Write it down.	You need a way to measure your efforts. Keep a daily or weekly record of things related to your goal, like sleep, calories, weight, and workouts. Use a logbook or try a mobile app.	To achieve any goal, you need to take action. Explain what you will do. Break down your goal into action steps you can take.	Set goals you can realistically accomplish in a few weeks or months.	Set time expectations. Have a start date and finish date by which you expect to reach your goal. This gives you a clear target to work toward.

Mind Over Matter

A big part of the challenge with keeping resolutions is all in your head. Lack of time tops the list as the number one reason people give for not following through with a goal to get healthy. But it's really just an excuse. Most people have time. Check out these facts about decision making, time management, and developing healthy habits.

7	Times a smoker tries before quitting for good
11	Hours the typical adult American spends sitting per day
34	Hours spent watching TV in an average week
66	Days it takes to develop a healthy habit
200	Decisions you make about food each day
5,000	Advertising messages you see in a day
35,000	Choices you make each day
233,000	Fast-food restaurants in the U.S.

One Day at a Time

10 Ways to Rescue Your Resolutions

You may have had a little trouble sticking to your resolutions in January. But that doesn't mean it's a lost cause. Here are 10 ways to improve your efforts to make positive changes:

- 1. Write it down. Studies show that people who write down their resolutions are 10 times more likely to succeed than those who don't.
- 2. Take baby steps. It's tough to change old habits overnight, so start small. Break your goal down into baby steps and take it one day at a time.
- 3. Find a role model. Find someone who has already achieved your goal and model their behavior.
- 4. Sleep on it. Your brain needs 7 to 8 hours of rest to help control impulsive behavior.
- 5. Limit stress. Too much stress makes your brain focus on short-term rewards instead of your big-picture goal. Take a walk, get some exercise, or practice deep breathing to keep stress levels down.
- 6. Eat healthy. The average person makes over 200 food choices a day. Healthy foods (fruits, vegetables, nuts and seeds, legumes, whole grains) feed your brain and improve willpower.
- 7. Exercise willpower. It takes practice to turn good intentions into healthy habits. At first it's hard, and you might mess up. But keep trying, and making the right choice gets easier.
- 8. Avoid procrastination. Adopt a do-it-now approach to working toward your goal. Even small steps will get you closer to your goal than doing nothing.
- 9. Reward progress. Choose healthy rewards for completing small goals. This can help you stay motivated to stick with your plan.
- 10. Visualize success. Visualize achieving your goal. Imagine the day you achieve your goal weight or give up cigarettes for good. Think about how you'll feel, how you'll celebrate, and how it will change your life.

A few days after her doctor's appointment, Jensen turned the calendar over to January 1. She made up her mind to lose weight one day at a time. She started with walking and eating healthier. She lost a few pounds. This motivated her to keep going. She finished a half-marathon. She cooked more meals at home. She ate healthier snacks. She reached her goal within a year, and so can you.

Take another look at your health and wellness goals for the year. If you've strayed from your plan a little since January 1, that's OK. Use this challenge to get back on track. You'll be glad you did.
